Scope and Importance:

Gynecology and Women's health is referred to the fact that health problems face a wide variety of challenges: managing the care of patients of all ages that are specific to women anatomy. It relates to the unique issues which includes pregnancy, menopause, and conditions of the female organs. Women's health also includes medical situations in which women face problems not directly related to their biology but due to gender-differentiated access to medical treatment. Women's health issues have attained higher international perceptibility in the recent decades. Such as the United States has a higher ratio of maternal deaths than at least 40 other countries, even though it spends more money per capita for maternity care than any other. Maternal deaths must be reviewed to make motherhood safer. The status of maternal deaths in the United States was part of a larger report on the global, regional, and national levels and causes of maternal mortality from 1990-2013. The findings suggest that only 16 countries will achieve a target of a 75% reduction in the maternal mortality ratio (or number of maternal deaths per 100,000 live births) by 2016.

The targeted policies and government initiatives, to decrease the burden of the women health diseases, have enabled women to lead healthier lives, while some significant gender-based health disparities remain the same in many countries. With limited awareness and less income levels, developing countries are making health improvements for women exceptionally difficult. The market for women healthcare is projected to grow at a steady CAGR of 5.04% during the forecast period from 2017-2023.

In a new business intelligence analysis, Transparency Market Research (TMR) notes that the global market for gynecological instruments is characterized by a high degree of competition due to the presence of numerous large manufacturers. In the near future, this leaves ample room for industry expansion. Big corporations such as Boston Scientific Corporation, Cooper Surgical, and Olympus Corporation are characterized by their vast array of products and global outreach. Such companies are working to launch non-invasive tools to reach a broader consumer base that will ultimately help extend their regional scope.

Global Women's Health Market:

The global health counseling demand for women will rise from nearly $33.0 billion in 2015 to nearly $40.6 billion by 2020, with a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 4.2 percent for the 2015-2020 timeframe.

By 2020, the demand for infertility treatment products is expected to reach USD 3,698.92 million from USD 1,822.32 million in 2015, at a CAGR of 15.21%. Care methods for infertility are used in assisted reproductive technology (ART) such as in vitro fertilization, intra cytoplasmic semen injection and surrogacy for infertility treatment.

Global population accounted for nearly 6.15 billion in 2010, of which 49.7% were women. It is predicted that the same trend will occur by 2025. In 2025, it is estimated that the world population will be 8.19bn, of which 49.5% will be women. The projection statistic illustrates the women's health market's growth potential until 2025. It is commonly known that women live longer than men and experience significant biochemical, physiological and emotional changes in their time of log life. Its trend is now acting as a spur in all countries around the globe to provide women with better education and healthcare services.

All major countries have raised their healthcare budget from time to time, increasing the development of the Women's Health Industry. Have the growing awareness of methods of birth control in both developing and developed countries is the major driving force for market growth. Also, policymakers in developing countries should promote abortion and other forms of birth control as an external market growth driver.
